FAKE NEWS

Fake news have existed for as long as we started to spread news and beliefs.

Only through the fast development and easy use of technology in this era fake news has become a big problem that people are having a hard time to deal with. Not only is fake news hard to identify, but it is also and most importantly impossible to control and prevent.

Everyone is somehow affected by fake news and very often it creates chaos in our society. Politics, economy and ecology are main actors and spectators of fake news. Having said that we can question ourselves, for instance, is global warming true or is it fake news like Trump says?

With Trump fake news got in the spot light and became an important yet undefinable topic all around the world. People try to warn each other from fake news and try to come up with systems to filter them out of social media, however with all the different opinions and information flowing around, it has become impossible to break the loop of fake news.

Indeed, newspapers will always try to defend their beliefs and convince people into thinking in a certain way.

Similarly, the tool of photography has become one of the best ways to spread fake news. Framing and freezing a certain moment, creates an image that can represent something completely different from reality and therefore communicate a whole new version of the "truth".
